

ABSTRACT

A method and apparatus for controlling power consumption by devices in an integrated circuit. The apparatus includes a complementary device for a corresponding device for which power consumption is desired to be reduced. The complementary device supports all or some of the tasks of the corresponding device. The complementary device receives tasks that can be executed by either itself or the corresponding device and based upon the power management scheme will either execute the task itself or allow the corresponding device.